

John Cockerill
Foundation

Building tomorrow's better world today

The John Cockerill Foundation
now resolutely defines itself as a builder of initiatives to create a better world.

Guidelines

The John Cockerill Foundation was set up in 2017, on the eve of the bicentenary of the John Cockerill Group. Its initial goal was to structure the company's sponsorship policy, and over the past four rich and intense years, more than 35 projects have been rolled out in the fields of history, heritage, culture and social issues.

In these few years alone, the world has changed a lot. Certain needs of Society have become even more significant, and this has irremediably prompted us to rethink our role, review our positioning and redefine our strategy.

All over the world, communities are confronted with multiple and complex challenges. Challenges in terms of access to healthy natural resources, to energy and to education. Through the John Cockerill Foundation, we intend to assist them to make their living conditions more dignified.

This is our new credo, our new commitment: the John Cockerill Foundation now resolutely defines itself as a builder of initiatives to create a better world.

Our actions are carried out according to the principle of mixed sponsorship. This system uses both financial and in-kind investments, whether through the provision of skills, products or services. In particular, the John Cockerill Foundation will draw on the formidable pool of talents and technologies of the John Cockerill Group in carrying out its projects.

We have chosen to concentrate our efforts on tangible local projects, anchored in reality. Projects whose objectives are directly linked to the Sustainable Development Goals defined by the UN: the reduction of poverty and inequalities, access to vital resources and education, improvement of well-being and quality of life.

“Alone I go faster, together we go further.” This African proverb perfectly summarises the advantages of collective intelligence. In accordance with this vision, we want to bring together and channel all the positive energies, with a view to coming up with new and innovative solutions that meet the needs of communities.

To build tomorrow's better world today.

To contribute to a better world
